

Urn Placement Options

Columbariums, ground burial, and the other resting places available for cremated remains at Washington Memorial Park.

SECTION 1

What Is a Columbarium?

A dignified above-ground resting place for cremated remains

A columbarium is a structure with individual compartments — called niches — designed to hold urns containing cremated remains. Columbariums offer a permanent, secure, and elegant alternative to scattering or in-ground burial. Placement carries charges beyond the niche or garden space itself. The Cemetery Property Guide walks through the space, endowment care, opening and closing, and the rest.

Each niche is sealed with a granite or bronze faceplate that can be engraved with the name, dates, and a personal inscription. Every niche at Washington Memorial Park carries the right to place two urns — there is no separate single-urn niche here. The one exception is the Veterans Court of Honor, where each niche holds one.

Washington Memorial Park features five columbarium locations, each with its own setting and character. Families are welcome to visit any time during park hours.

SECTION 3

Ground Burial of an Urn

Two ways to do it, and what the urn itself has to be

Cremated remains do not have to go into a columbarium. They can be buried, and there are two quite different ways to do that here.

In a standard grave space

ANYWHERE IN THE CEMETERY

An urn can be placed in an ordinary grave space, in any section of the park. If a family wants to buy an available casket plot and place an urn in it, they can — and a single space will hold up to three urns.

This is what families choose when they want to be where their family already is, or when they want room for more than one person in one place.

- One, two, or three urns in the same space
- Additional cost for the second and third — each placement is its own interment, so ask us to price the number you have in mind
- Any section — including beside family already at rest here

Lake Urn Garden

BUILT FOR URN BURIAL · AT THE FRONT OF THE CEMETERY

Some sections are built specifically for urn burial rather than for caskets. At Washington Memorial Park those are in the Lake Urn Garden, near the front of the park.

These spaces are sized for cremated remains and hold one urn per space. They are the more affordable option, and they sit in a quieter, more compact setting than the main burial sections.

- One urn per space
- Endowment care — perpetual grounds maintenance
- Opening & closing and recording fee
- Flush granite marker — quoted separately (see the Marker Guide)

WHAT THE URN ITSELF HAS TO BE

Anything buried in the ground has to be able to survive being there. For a ground placement you have two choices, and either one satisfies it:

- Put the urn inside an urn vault — a small outer container that protects it underground. This lets you bury an urn that was not made for burial, including a wood or a ceramic one. See the Burial Vault Guide for the urn vault options and prices.
- Or choose an urn rated for burial — the marble urns shown under “Urn for Ground Burial” in the Cremation Guide and the Urn Catalog are made to go straight into the ground.

SECTION 4

Choosing the Right Placement
